Module 1: Risk Financing Overview

Begins April 19, 2027

Module 1 Description
Becoming comfortable with risk financing starts with learning the terminology as well as the foundational concepts. This module will introduce you to the basics of a risk financing program, from the philosophy to deciding if a feasibility study is needed. It will also introduce you to two key partners of a risk financing program – the broker and the actuary – who are instrumental in the development and maintenance of an effective insurance program.

Module 2: The Tools of Risk Financing

Begins April 26, 2027

Module 2 Description
The strength of a risk financing program can be found in how thoroughly the risk manager knows their program. The best skill of the risk manager is the ability to identity and classify risk, so that decisions can be made as to where to establish coverage for that risk. These decisions will serve as the parameters of the program, which will allow for success in reaching the program philosophy. In this module, you will learn the types of reserves, how to classify exposures for your program and the ramifications of key insurance language called 'indemnification' or 'hold harmless'.

Module 3: Projecting Future Risk

Begins May 3, 2027

Module 3 Description
A risk financing program requires that future risk exposures be appropriately determined so that the funding for the exposures is accurate. This funding will then cover the future losses, based on historical and industry performance. Thus, it is important for the risk manager to understand what goes into the actuarial analysis of the program's losses, including how occupied bed equivalents and modification factors are determined. This knowledge allows the risk manager to understand how changes in risk exposure (adding physicians, new services or new locations) impacts the amount of future funding and premium setting.

Module 4: Implementing Risk Financing Strategies

Begins May 10, 2027

Module 4 Description
The risk manager can directly impact the success of the risk financing program by facilitating decision making around what risk exposures the program should include, and how to best utilize industry resources to address risks that need to remain in the commercial market. This facilitation includes the management of the captive board meetings and agendas, establishing a strong renewal presentation to present to carriers and constantly reviewing the program for needed strategy changes. This module will bring together the information from the previous modules, illustrating how the success of the insurance program can be secured through the actions of a strong risk manager.
